difficult step

Write your difficult step here.

chosen focus

Write your chosen focus here.

Select one focus and describe it in observable terms.

This self-paced course helps an adult learner practise reading and summarising a short fictional passage. Start by identifying which part of that task feels least clear.

You may want practice locating a main idea, distinguishing an example from a claim or writing a concise summary. This self-check is a personal choice, not a diagnostic assessment.

Current comfort / difficult step / chosen focus

Working record: Select one focus and describe it in observable terms. Keep your first attempt and your revised version so the change remains visible.

Set a small learning goal.

Action

Write your action here.

artifact

Write your artifact here.

review question

Write your review question here.

Write a goal you can check against a short piece of your own writing.

A useful goal describes an action you can review in your own work. Avoid a broad promise such as become an excellent reader by the end of the document.

Example: write a two-sentence summary that keeps the main claim and one qualification. The goal concerns a written artifact rather than a certificate or score.

Action / artifact / review question

Working record: Write a goal you can check against a short piece of your own writing. Keep your first attempt and your revised version so the change remains visible.

Pick a route through the practice.

Route A

Write your route a here.

route B

Write your route b here.

route C

Write your route c here.

return point

Write your return point here.

Choose a route and name the reason it fits your present question.

Choose a route based on your focus while retaining the same final reflection. Route A starts with the main claim; route B starts with examples; route C starts with uncertainty.

Suggested route A: pages 4, 5, 6, 9, 10. Route B: pages 5, 4, 7, 9, 10. Route C: pages 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. You can revisit any page.

Route A / route B / route C / return point

Working record: Choose a route and name the reason it fits your present question. Keep your first attempt and your revised version so the change remains visible.

Take a note that separates roles.

Claim

Write your claim here.

example

Write your example here.

qualification

Write your qualification here.

Make a three-part note without turning may into will.

Label the main claim, supporting example and qualification in an invented passage. Notes are easier to reuse when they preserve these distinctions.

Passage: A shared sketch may focus a conversation; for example, a speaker can point to a shape. This depends on the discussion task. The final sentence qualifies the first.

Claim / example / qualification

Working record: Make a three-part note without turning may into will. Keep your first attempt and your revised version so the change remains visible.

Try a summary station.

Original idea

Write your original idea here.

shorter wording

Write your shorter wording here.

retained condition

Write your retained condition here.

Write your own two-sentence summary and underline its qualification.

Write a short summary of the passage using fewer words while preserving its uncertainty. Concision should not erase the condition that makes the claim accurate.

Possible draft: A shared sketch can provide a common reference, but its usefulness depends on the task. This is a summary of an invented passage, not a research finding.

Original idea / shorter wording / retained condition

Working record: Write your own two-sentence summary and underline its qualification. Keep your first attempt and your revised version so the change remains visible.

Review with a feedback key.

Claim retained

Write your claim retained here.

example handled

Write your example handled here.

condition retained

Write your condition retained here.

Identify one expansion or omission in your draft and explain its effect.

Compare the meaning of your summary with the source passage. The key checks whether a claim, example or condition disappeared; it does not assign a grade.

If your draft says shared sketches improve all discussions, it has expanded the original claim. If it merely lists a shape, it may have retained the example but lost the main idea.

Claim retained / example handled / condition retained

Working record: Identify one expansion or omission in your draft and explain its effect. Keep your first attempt and your revised version so the change remains visible.

Use a targeted support page.

Difficulty

Write your difficulty here.

support move

Write your support move here.

new attempt

Write your new attempt here.

Choose one support move and use it on the same passage.

Return to the step that caused difficulty rather than restarting the whole course. A support exercise should address a specific confusion.

If examples dominate your notes, highlight only the sentence that makes the general claim. If uncertainty disappears, copy the conditional phrase before writing a new summary.

Difficulty / support move / new attempt

Working record: Choose one support move and use it on the same passage. Keep your first attempt and your revised version so the change remains visible.

Apply the method to a new passage.

New claim

Write your new claim here.

condition

Write your condition here.

concise version

Write your concise version here.

Write a fresh summary and note one difference from the shared-sketch passage.

Transfer the reading routine to another invented statement. Keep the main claim and its boundary visible instead of borrowing the conclusion from the earlier example.

New passage: offering several texts might invite different interests; however, a discussion needs a way to share references. Identify the claim and the condition before summarising.

New claim / condition / concise version

Working record: Write a fresh summary and note one difference from the shared-sketch passage. Keep your first attempt and your revised version so the change remains visible.

Artifact

Write your artifact here.

version

Write your version here.

change

Write your change here.

reason

Write your reason here.

Select four artifacts and arrange them so another reader can follow the revision.

Bring your first note, first summary, feedback note and revised summary together. A small portfolio makes the route visible even when you took the pages out of order.

Label each artifact by version, not an invented completion date. Include one line explaining why the revised version better matches the source.

Artifact / version / change / reason

Working record: Select four artifacts and arrange them so another reader can follow the revision. Keep your first attempt and your revised version so the change remains visible.

Clearer step

Write your clearer step here.

remaining difficulty

Write your remaining difficulty here.

next practice

Write your next practice here.

Name one next practice task and the artifact you will use to review it.

Reflect on the step that became clearer and the difficulty that remains. The next route should follow from that observation rather than a generic instruction to practise more.

You might continue with conditional claims, compare two passages or practise separating examples from explanations. No result about real learner performance is supplied by this template.

Clearer step / remaining difficulty / next practice

Working record: Name one next practice task and the artifact you will use to review it. Keep your first attempt and your revised version so the change remains visible.
